Directions: Using research or the sample annotated bibliography provided, think carefully about the following questions and write a response to each.

1. In all of your research, state two or three specific aspects of the content which interested you. (For example, you are more interested in data collection than interpretation, or your interests are in pediatric physical therapy rather than physical therapy for adults.)

2. Which research study or articles were of most interest to you? Elaborate.

3. What are the "hot topics" or recurring discussions in your research field?

4. For what topic would you have enough research right now to write a research paper or develop a product? List some sources you would use.

5. In which topics might you be interested but need to research further to gather more information?

6. To what sources can you return to find additional sources in the bibliography to research?

7. List human resources in this area whom you might contact for ideas (addresses, e-mail).
